The present invention relates to a recorder capable of simultaneously printing letters and figures of different sizes. In one type of recorder, a printer is used, or an impact dot matrix printer as is generally used with small-sized business machines, and another printer is used, or an impact dot matrix printer as is generally used with small-sized desk top computers. In addition to the above, a cassette printer, for example, is used. If the number of lines of recording to be printed is fixed, a printer to be used is determined in accordance with the number of lines of recording. In the case of an impact dot matrix printer, at the present time, a printer, in which the number of lines of recording is fixed to 16, is used; and with a cassette printer, a printer in which the number of lines of recording is fixed to 64 is used. Hence, there is a problem in that a particular type of printer is required in order to be able to print ba244e880a
