The government has criticised Australia's biggest energy company for a pattern of cost blowouts and poor performance, leading to repeated criticism of the boss. Australia's biggest energy company said on Friday it has been provided with its first set of "compliance requirements" issued by the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) in response to a government review. The comments from Origin Energy, which was taken over by oil giant Santos in a $22 billion deal in 2016, follow a number of investigations into companies' compliance with tax rules, including the Commonwealth Bank, Westpac and ANZ Banking Group. Origin's revenue sank in the 2017 financial year as low-cost gas from overseas markets has offset high costs of production in Australia and the company has struggled to meet a quota in commitments to its shareholders. Origin, which has a market capitalisation of about $17 billion, has endured a pattern of cost blowouts and poor performance. In the 2017 financial year, Origin's profit margins fell. The company's operating profit was down 26 per cent to $3.1 billion, below market expectations of $
