The Descendants (film) The Descendants is a 2010 American-Spanish drama film directed by Alexander Payne and written by Payne and Nat Faxon. It is based on the novel of the same name by Kauai Hart Hemmings, and stars George Clooney as Matt King, an ex-CIA officer and widower whose daughters go to the Hawaiian Islands to live with their mother and Matt's deceased wife. It was released in the United States on May 18, 2011. Plot In 1975, Matt King, a U.S. Secret Service agent, is recruited by an unnamed CIA contact at a Washington bar to go to Hawaii to protect the estate of a Saudi prince, who is the heir to the Saudi throne. However, upon his arrival, King is met by his estranged wife, Elle, who has just had a one-night stand with the prince she is guarding, and now blames him for ruining her life. The family arrives in Hawaii after a twelve-hour flight, and then a two-hour flight to the prince's estate. They are all greeted by a local councilman named Bill Rawls, who is in charge of the estate and security. The family lives in luxury while Elle performs her duties as the family princess. After King's third night on the estate, Elle sends her daughters out for an errand. One of them, five-year-old Elizabeth, is left alone on the estate by mistake, and she is found by a Native Hawaiian teenager named David. After taking her to an all-night diner, David drops her off at an airport, where she boards a plane home to the United States. When the King family finally arrives at the airport, the trip turns from happy to catastrophic. While waiting for the girls to return, Elizabeth sees their car being washed with a hose attached to the engine, and she is subsequently snatched by the men who washed it. As the police investigation is underway, the King family meets with the local police chief, who insists that Elle be the prime suspect. King is granted a 10-day leave of absence and, when he goes to her house, she tells him that she wants to be a nun. The Prince gets a new fiancée named Eliza, who had been the Prince's assistant.
