Check your movie file name in Google along with "SRT" e.g. Movie file name is abcd.mp4. Then search along with "SRT" For people, who have a sony a5100 c8bx, try the following. Open (right click) the browser (chrome), and goto the developer tools. In the developer tools, under the "resources" tab, click on "Media" in the bottom right corner. Scroll down to find an option "Content-Type" which reads "application/x-mpegurl; charset=utf-8" delete the "charset=utf-8" part, and it will work. A: Check the file in internet explorer. It may be a compressed format like MP4 (which cannot be downloaded unless you have a player) Antigen presentation for the initiation of immune responses requires that antigenic peptides be translocated from the cytosol to the endoplasmic reticulum (ER) where the peptides are loaded onto major histocompatibility complex (MHC) class I or class II proteins, respectively. Because these peptides are generated through the degradation of cytosolic proteins, they are initially shielded from proteolytic attack by binding to peptide-binding groove of a molecule with chaperone activity and by attaching to the amino-terminal peptide binding domain of peptide loading complexes (PLCs). During this process, a MHC class I or class II molecule acquires a conformation that directs the peptide binding domains to the appropriate peptide binding groove in the lumen of the ER. Although this cycle of loading and presentation of peptides to T cells can be relatively efficient (up to 25,000-fold), it is clearly not 100% efficient. Indeed, there are several observations suggesting that a proportion of these peptides escapes into the cytosol and are targeted for degradation by the proteasome. The broad aim of this proposal is to better understand the mechanism by which MHC class I peptides are translocated from the cytosol into the ER and then loaded onto MHC class I molecules. These studies will be performed using a combination of in vitro biochemistry and in vivo genetics.
