For nearly a millennium and a half, the consecrated and divine guidance of prophetic medicine was overshadowed by the rising tide of technology ... It was only when there seemed to be a kind of complete technological advance in the field of medicine, and even more than ever before, that some people became concerned about the ability of doctors and nurses to use their knowledge, talents and expertise, as well as their health, in the treatment of disease so that they could be used for other purposes. What, then, is religion? If this were the case, there would be no point in studying religion.
