were at higher risk for RTA. In addition to commonly known risk factors, we found a significant association between exposure to LLINs in lower socioeconomic areas and RTA for the first time. While the mechanism through which protective mosquito nets delay the development of insecticide resistance has not yet been fully understood, it may be possible that targeting more vulnerable groups (e.g. vulnerable sub-group of the vulnerable) would have the greatest impact. Another reason, which could partly explain the protective effect of LLINs, could be that LLINs affect the development of insecticide resistance. Previous studies have shown that the development of resistance to insecticides can be affected by the use of insecticide-impregnated nets \[[@B6]-[@B8]\]. In addition, it is well known that agricultural practices (e.g. use of pesticides) and agricultural and non-agricultural job-based activities (e.g. logging and construction) are positively associated with malaria and were found to be associated with RTA. We did not observe significant associations between these potential risk factors and RTA; however, further investigations into how these factors may influence RTA are warranted. The main strengths of this study are the large sample size and the use of a matched design, thereby minimizing potential selection bias and confounding. In addition, our findings are likely to be generalizable to other settings in sub-Saharan Africa. However, there were several limitations to this study. In the matched analysis, we were unable to adjust for possible time-dependent factors (e.g., RTA could decrease in the first 6 months and then increase in the second 6 months). However, after a sub-group analysis was performed on age- and sex-matched groups, we observed similar results to the unmatched analysis. Another limitation was the use of cross-sectional data, which prevents us from drawing conclusions about causality. Because of the nature of the retrospective cohort study design, our study could not account for changes in work-related activities or the use of LLINs. Finally, one could argue that exposures we measured may not accurately reflect actual exposures to LLINs at the time of the injury. However, a community cross-sectional study previously conducted in the area showed that the ownership of LLINs was high (83%) \[[@B28]\]. As we only collected data for the six months prior to the interview, these results were likely to provide more accurate exposures than those obtained from the entire year prior

I am currently in India with my wife and daughter. I am planning to start my business back home in the UK, but I have a few minor tax issues that I need to sort out to make a formal start. I was born in Argentina and have never lived there. My father was Brazilian so he went back there on retirement. My mother is Spanish which means I am able to use the British system that is based on the Spanish system and with a home that is paid for out of my British bank account. I have been working in the IT world for around 12 years and have worked my way up to Senior Executive with a rather large multinational which is based in Eastern Europe. I consider myself to be a technical person and have worked in the outsourcing industry for around 7 years. This means I am technically experienced with dealing with foreign clients. I am also a Cambridge student (read BSc) which means that I have had around 4 years working experience in the IT field and around 12-15 years in education. I also hold a degree in education. I have been a permanent resident in the UK since I was 18 and my permanent residence status has not been contested since. I have not applied for the option of using the EB-5 program to boost my business. I have also not applied for an investor visa in any country as I have always had a status of Working Holiday Migrant Visa. My wife and I have lived in various countries over the years and have a network of family and friends in various parts of the world. The idea to start my own business arose a couple of years ago, but I have decided to turn the idea into reality now as I have been taking a 3-6 month leave of absence from my job to focus on my company. I would like to start my business in my local town of Stilton in the UK. I also have a few cousins in various parts of the UK and Ireland. My final plan is to eventually build the business from there, but I need to work on the initial set-up first. How do I apply for the status of 'Permanent Residence' in the UK? I am just going to start my business and I will apply for 'Immigration visa' as soon as I have set up my office and I am confident that this would give me enough time to do so. I am confident that I could apply for the visa, but I need to know what I need to do to apply
