Try it out Barcode Read It!Q: Counting the number of distinct elements in a list in a nested for loop I have a list as so: list = [22,2,1,4,5,1,2,4,5,1,2] I want to do the following: for i in

range(0, len(list), 1): for j in range(0, list[i], 1):
print(list[j])

 And the result of the above would be: 22 2 1
4 5 1 2 4 5 1 2
What I want to know is, since I'm only counting unique elements in the list in the innermost for loop, how can I count the length of that list? So I want the length of the above list to equal 15, since that is the number of unique elements in the list. I should also note that this is intended to be part of a for loop that loops over the length of the list and then access each element in the list.
A: You could use `itertools.groupby()` like this:

import itertools
l = [22,2,1,4,5,1,2,4,5,1,2]
for k,g in itertools.groupby(l):
    print k
    print [next(g) for _ in range(len(g))]

 Output 22 [2, 1, 4, 5, 1, 2
