I have some JS files which get imported on every html page I have. Example : These JS files are used through the usual :

$(document).ready(function() { // Do something });

At some point I want to have something like a global variable. I could do it in the inventory.js (window.inventory = { ... }); style and then in products.js call inventory.some_variable. The problem is that I would need this inventory in the class and I really don't know how to share it. class Data: def __init__(self): # do something self.inventory.some_variable = "something" This doesn't work because I don't share the variable. Do you have any suggestion? Thank you :) A: You could pass it as a parameter to __init__: class Data: def __init__(self, inventory): # do something self.inventory = inventory
