This final stage is the concluding "straw" for what is, in fact, an extraordinary global event - the 15th edition of the Winter Games. In fact, the Vancouver 2014 edition is the first in history to feature both a Winter and Summer Games, the Vancouver Sun reports. And the dual events are a good example of the ultimate Olympics quest - establishing new sporting and cultural frontiers. Outlying nations like Kazakhstan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Turkey, Ukraine, the U.S., Germany and Japan are part of the Winter Games 2012 but also the Philippines and India. In addition, South Korea has sported both the Summer and Winter Games in every edition from the inaugural 1936 Berlin Games through 1998 Nagano. This, of course, is one of the reasons why a post-Olympic cruise on the Nile in Egypt - leading to the city of Thebes - is a logical and highly desirable stopover. And it is equally noteworthy that the Vancouver Winter Games - the most diverse so far - is a venue for 131 countries with a total of 1,890 athletes and 1,200 journalists. There are athletes from 61 national Olympic committees (NOCs)
